Reflective Lesson 1st Meeting Prose and Language Pedagogy

In the first meeting of Prose and Language Pedagogy, I learned that prose is a type of writing that does not have a specific rhythm like poetry. Before this class, I did not really understand what prose was and how it was different from other forms of literature. From the discussion, I learned that prose can be divided into two main types : fiction and nonfiction.

Prose fiction is an imaginative story written in ordinary sentences and paragraphs rather than poetic verse or dramatic scripts. Meanwhile, nonfiction prose is writing that uses ordinary, non-poetic language and is based on real facts, actual events, and real people. From this meeting, I realized that prose is actually very close to our daily lives because we can find it in many kinds of writing, such as stories, articles, biographies, and other texts. This meeting also made me understand that learning prose is not only about reading stories, but also about understanding how a text is written and what we can learn from it. Overall, the first meeting gave me a better basic understanding of prose and made me more interested in learning about it in the next meetings.
